A Permanent Home For This Site

SexEd.net is looking for a new permanent home—one that will ensure this valuable free public resource endures and evolves for years to come.

- The biological drive behind sex is profoundly powerful—often considered the next most compelling human instinct after the need for water, food, and shelter.
- This site was founded on the belief that sex education in this country is often incomplete or inadequate. By providing access to a wide range of reliable information—not from a single source, but from many—the site aims to help reduce unwanted pregnancies, and prevent mental and physical health issues that arise from limited or inaccurate knowledge about sex.
- It's difficult to decide who and when people should have increased knowledge about sex, or how specific or deep that teaching should be. We leave that up to the viewer. Some parents will limit access to this site while other parents are happy this site exists for supplying real information they are uncomfortable teaching their kids.
- Where many sites give the opinions of one person or organization, this site gives a minimum of ten (10) different views on each of over 134 sexual Topics on this site.
- The site has no ads.
- There is no registration to use the site because registration would naturally inhibit some from having access to its information.
- Because the site is free, nonprofit, and educational, the information on this site has been accumulated by approval of the content creators, or as FAIR USE.

NOTICE

There are numerous local, state and federal laws about various sexual activities, in different parts of the United States. Such law should be adhered to.
